WHERE YOU ARE RIGHT NOW

Everything Is Happening at Once

Opening a restaurant means hiring, training, vendors, menus, and a hundred small decisions landing on the same desk at the same time. Most of what makes opening week succeed or fail never gets written down. It lives in your head, in text threads, and in whatever you remember to say out loud to whoever's standing in front of you.

"We're opening soon and everything feels scattered." That's not a sign you're behind. It's the normal weight of opening a restaurant without a system to carry it.

WHAT'S INCLUDED

A Complete Launch System

- Opening roadmap & 30-day rollout plan
- Hiring & onboarding plan
- Staff training system
- Opening & closing procedures
- Kitchen, bar & service SOPs
- Service standards & guest experience guide
- Manager tools & accountability checklists
- Vendor & contact organization

WHY IT MATTERS

Opening Week Runs on a Plan

When the systems are written down before doors open, training goes faster, new hires know what's expected on day one, and you're not the only person who knows how the kitchen, bar, and floor are supposed to run together. The goal isn't paperwork. It's an opening that doesn't depend entirely on you holding every detail in your head at once.
